Wanted: A Concrete Main St.

Every town is entitled to at least one modernly paved street. The Main Streets of Appomattox are just half of that. . . only half its length is paved with concrete. The Times Virginian believes that the best allocation of state highway funds should include money to complete the concrete paving of Main street from end to end.

We concede no argument whatsoever, against this need. There is no one whatsoever not to include this in the next allocations. Perhaps all that is needed to get it, is a little "push" by local business people.

Completing Holiday Lake

Exceeding welcome news to this section was the announcement this week that funds have been made available for the completion of the federal project at Holiday Lake. This development offer major possibilities for becoming the recreation center of Central Virginia.

Of the long-delayed restoration at the Surrender Grounds can be spoken under way. Appomattox will, indeed, have a rosy future.

Looking Ahead

From Imperial Magazine

Recently the management and control of some great and venerable corporations have been turned over to men under forty years of age. A pilgrim returning from Washington this year, reported to friends in his home town that we are governed by children. He was shocked at the youth of the members of Congress and the holders of important administrative posts.

Older men frequently distrust young men. They fear that they are inexperienced and unseasoned. But only a good part of the older generation is glad that young men are being given responsibility and opportunity. Some investors are deeply choosing to put their savings in the care of men in their thirties who are looking ahead to good new days and who know nothing of the good old days.

It is a time of world transition. It is well to remember that young men have always done big things.

Big Enough To Do The Job.

From Imperial Magazine

There are as big as little! There are a hundred different answers to the question of how big a man should be, but they all boil down to this.

Business should be as big as necessary to do a good job.

Everybody knows that most rural communities depend for their livelihood on revenue from the business farming. In communities of that kind small local stores may adequately serve the needs. On the other hand, a paper company, for instance, must be big enough to house and operate at least one paper machine.

Business is called upon to do all of things. It must build row-boats and 15,000-ton battleships. It must make highly scientific devices which are correct down to a hundredth of an inch, and it must fashion locomotives and great ships like those used to dig the Panama Canal.

American business has become big because America has grown too big to be served by small business. In 1870 America was relatively poor and American business was relatively small. There were few roads and they were poor. Only rich men could afford to own a horse and buggy. Manufactured goods were expensive. In 1870 because they were made slowly by hand.

The population of the United States in 1870 was 38,000,000, of which 32 per cent were employed in farming. By 1930 the population had increased to 123,000,000, of which only 21 per cent were employed in farming. Therefore the population in 1930 was about three times that of 1870, but there were four times as many persons holding jobs.

Three-Lane Dangers

From Winchester Star

Michigan's state highway department rules against further construction of three-lane highways. This type of road, designed originally as a safety precaution, has proved a death trap.

In part, perhaps, the danger element in the three lanes comes from a habit fostered by wider roads. The familiar signs, "Drive Traffic Keep To The Right" prompts the speeder to think he has the right of way in the middle of the road. Thus the middle of the three-lane road becomes a meeting ground for speeders going both ways.

This is unfortunate, since the three lanes are adequate, if properly used, for carrying normal traffic on most roads outside of the metropolitan districts. For the big main thoroughfares the ideal is a complete separation of traffic going in opposite directions. For less busy roads, the two-lane type is safer and more satisfactory.

Providing a no man's land in which reckless drivers do their wrecking, is proving bad policy.

Municipal Debt Declines

From Atlanta Constitution

Although the present national debt of more than $40,000,000,000 threatens to push the top off the lawful limitation— nearly $16,000,000,000 more than in the dismal years of 1933— some consolation is to be found in the inclination of city debt to decline. In fact, the debt trend of some 300 representative cities, according to the National Municipal League, is definitely downward.

To be more precise, the total debt of 310 cities surveyed is $73,000,000 less than a year ago. On the whole, the older, more experienced municipalities have shown the largest reduction and carry the smallest load. Boston, for example, with $90 per capita debt of $90, ranks far below the national average per capita of $179.

This decline, however, is traceable not to the lack of a willingness to go further into debt to match federal "recklessness" but to the fact that municipalities, in many instances, are now getting or have prospects of getting public buildings and other developments without putting up local funds. While a feeling of anxiety has doubtless grown over municipal debt as such, very little sentiment has developed against the notion that "money from Washington" is not money owed locally and doesn't have to be paid back.

Not until the people back home become thoroughly conscious that public money is the people's money, their money, regardless of the agency through which it is disbursed, will the upward trend in the national debt cease. In any event, there is no consolation to be had from the pause, regardless of its cause, in the long skyward movement in municipal indebtedness.

Some-Grown Trees Produce Best Seed, Says Expert

Seeds from trees in the back yard or along a neighbor's fence are likely to produce better trees than those from far places, says Wilbur O'Byrne, forester, Virginia Agricultural Extension Division.

O'Byrne points out that the U. S. Department of Agriculture now plants only trees from local seeds for its work in erosion control and reforestation. Local seeds are considered to be those obtained within a hundred miles of the planting site and with a difference in elevation of not more than 1,000 feet.

O'Byrne quotes the U. S. Forest Service, which plants about 160 million trees a year: "Trees must be thoroughly adapted to the climate of the planting site. Seeds of even the same species gathered at great distances from the planting location cannot compete with the home-grown product. Sooner or later a variation occurs in the size of the seedling and in their survival, usually in favor of the home -area seedlings."

At its southern Forestry Experiment Station, the Forest Service found that seedling trees from seeds collected locally grew faster and were less subject to disease and unfavorable weather conditions than those which were grown from seeds collected at a distance. It was also found that the superiority of locally grown seed continued and even increased after the little trees were transplanted to the field.

Measurement of loblolly pine plantations at Bogalusa, La., 10 years after establishment proved this source of seed is important in reforestration. The plantations consisted originally of 200 trees each from four seed lots obtained from Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and Georgia. These seeds were planted in the same nursery bed at Bogalusa and the resulting seedlings were planted on cut-over longleaf pineland. Ten years later Forest Service investigators found that the local stock from Louisiana had grown stood 13 1-2 feet, the Texas stock 11 1-2 feet and the Arkansas stock only 11 feet.

Even greater differences in favor of local stock were shown by the percentages of trees infected on stem and branches with gall. Gall infection was found on 3.6 percent of Louisiana stock; 7 percent of the Texas stock; 10.2 percent of the Arkansas stock; and 51 percent of the Georgia stock.

Breath Bad, Logy? You May Need This

Just as the lighthouse flashes a friendly warning to sailors, so Nature sends out headaches, bad breath, biliousness, which often warn of constipation.

Too many misunderstand or neglect those symptoms and thereby may invite a host of constipation's other discomforts: sour stomach, belching, loss of appetite or energy.

Be wise. Take quick, all vegetable BLACK-DRAUGHT tonight by simple directions and clear your bowels gently, promptly, thoroughly. This intestinal tonic-laxative helps give tone to lazy bowels.

Its long life and popularity testify to BLACK-DRAUGHT's merit.

BEVERAGE ALCOHOL AND THE COMMUNITY

LESSON TEXT—Joel 1:5-7; Daniel 5:1-3, 17, 25-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink.—Habakkuk 2:15.

"None of us liveth to himself" (Rom. 14:7).

What concerns the individual concerns the community, for the community is made up of individuals. The man who uses alcohol has no right to claim that it is a personal matter, for alcohol is a poisonous drug which not only affects the individual, but makes him a danger and a liability to his community. Before going into our lesson let us look at only a few of the many facts available.

In the five years since repeal, it is estimated that $30,000,000,000 has been spent for intoxicants with a profit to the industry of $13,250,000,000. But what has it cost the people?

"In 1937, an entire city the size of Detroit was maimed and injured, and an entire city the size of Omaha was permanently injured, by the automobile. Sixty per cent of auto fatalities are due to alcohol" (Chief Justice of Municipal Court, Evanston, Ill.).

"Rape has increased 13 per cent and the more atrocious forms 40 per cent in the last eight months" (Police Commissioner, Boston, Mass.).

"Criminals are for the return of liquor, wet propaganda to the contrary notwithstanding, and with the coming of repeal will come the greatest era of wholesale crime this country has ever known. The criminal world is tensely expectant and is prepared to launch immediately into its millennium of crime. The return of the saloon inevitably will bring open prostitution and gambling" (Statement by a criminal in prison before repeal became effective).

"America is on the worst gambling spree in its history. A gross population, not including all rural districts, of 80,000,000 persons is daily betting $6,000,000 on winnings and losings, of which all but about $1,000,000,000 passes through the hands of the underworld, or more much of it remains" (Courtnes E. Cooper).

The American Business Men's Foundation, Chicago, reports that liquor was responsible for the repeal of a million of more than 92,000 applications for insurance last year, and that as a result widows and orphans will ultimately be deprived of over $200,000,000 of insurance, making some serious public charges.

Three words which are altogether appropriate for the liquor problem will serve to summarize our lesson.

I. Devastation (Joel 1:5-7).

Drunkards are called on to awake from their drunken sleep and weep and the drinkers of wine (note that!) to wail over the loss of their drink because of the devastation wrought by the locusts. This plague had come because of the sins of the people, and may well serve to exemplify the devastation which will follow the use of alcohol as a beverage. The nations of our day need not think that they will escape if they continue on their present road of reckless indulgence.

II. Debauchery (Dan. 5:1-4).

The familiar story of Belshazzar's feast should be made to live again as we point out that we here have vividly manifested three of the great characteristics of the day in which we live—a coming together of great multitudes for a riotous night of drinking, which must of course end for many in disgusting drunkenness; provision for acts of darkest sensuality in the fact that all the wives and concubines were invited to this feast . . . and a contemptuous, deliberate insulting of the name of God" (Dr. Wilbur M. Smith).

III. Death (vv. 5, 17, 25-28).

Dramatically swift was God's judgment upon Belshazzar's presumptuous sin. Magnificently bold and direct was the condemnation by Daniel, the prophet of God. Relentless was the immediate judgment of physical death (see v. 30), and equally sure is the ultimate judgment when the drunken king stands before his Maker to answer for the deeds done in the flesh.

The fact that God does not write in our day in flaming letters on the saloon wall before the bleary eyes of the drinker does not mean that His judgment is any less certain, nor does it make it less dreadful.

Cost of Happiness

God has ordained that happiness, like every other good thing, should cost us something; He has willed that it should be a moral achievement, and not an accident.—Dr. Gasparin.

Walk in the Light

Walk in the light and thou shalt see thy path, though thorny, bright; for God, by grace, shall dwell in thee, and God himself is light.—Barton.

Westside Evergreen

Westside Evergreen, August 16.—Notwithstanding the fact that Congress has adjourned, politics is still the chief topic of conversation wherever men congregate. One of the unwritten laws of the land is that the President of the United States shall be the head of his party until another man has been nominated to succeed him. It has frequently happened in the past, that as a President nears the end of his second term as President, that he finds himself at odds with many of the leaders of his party. Also some of the above chosen to "take a walk," or bolt the party that placed him in office. A notice in a recent paper P. D. R. has stated publicly that unless the next Democratic convention, endorses his policies, or nominates a man of his choice, he also is ready to "take a walk." This would undoubtedly create a serious problem, as he has so many lieutenants and hirelings, whose allegience is bought and paid for with the people's money; there is serious danger of the disruption of the Democratic party. The writer has voted in every presidential election since Grover Cleveland's first term, and during this nearly half a century has "taken a walk" only once, and that "Solid South" walked with him, "for conscience sake."

J. M. Clapp and George Farrar are in the midst of "pulling" their fine-cured tobacco. They report a somewhat better crop than last year. Early corn has about matured, and crop. Farm folk are living on the "fat of the land." Your correspondent has talked with many farm wives recently, and they report so many good things to eat, that we find it try to enumerate them is would make a bee line for the "sticks." For instance, Mrs. X. Y. Z. will have fried chicken for dinner today, roast duck tomorrow, leg o' lamb another day, and so on, ad infinitum. What is better for the summer man on a hot summer day than a big batch of home-made ice-cream, or maybap the good wife will send to the boys in the field a bucket of ice cold lemonade!

Good Things To Eat on the Farm

Just when he was "single and foot-free" several farm boys took with them to the fodder field the makings of a big bucket of lemonade, which they concealed near a cool spring, whither they retired later to rest and quench their thirst, but, while we were drinking and making merry the boss comes on the scene with "it's good, boys!"
